

Travelers along the Olympic Highway who pass through Central Park can hardly help noticing the grotto-like yard-art assemblage in the front yard of John C. McMeekin. A retired logger, who still works in the timber-industry as a safety consultant, Mr. McMeekin has been collecting old logging equipment for years. His yard assemblage is unique, but he is often called upon to decorate booths at logging equipment shows, which he does by lending some of the more movable pieces from his collection.